

Perrin Oake

Hook

a stranded fellow courier with a bent route pin

Public Read

A broad simiah courier grins through road dust, wrapped in a battered coat, tapping a cracked compass while coin charms and route tags hang from the straps.

Comes Across As

Road-worn and warm, humming when he feels safe and silent when he does not. Taps a cracked compass that points to the last place he felt safe instead of north, and pretends that is a feature.
