Celebration of moss-ripened crops and spring abundance. Firstmoss is not a party break; it is Hush showing what the ward protects. The banners are crooked, the stage wobbles, and the singing is terrible and beloved. The joy is real and just effortful enough to notice, the way a town laughs loudest on the day it most needs to. The place breaks into usable table spaces: Tiny stage: A wobbly platform holds speeches, music, and public nerves. Food line: Festival food tells players what the village grows and values. Moss lantern lane: Fresh green lanterns mark a beautiful path. Game corner:

Children and adults compete in low-stakes games with very serious local rules.
Plants and materials: firstmoss lanterns, braided reed streamers, festival herbs, freshly cut moss crowns. Animals and background life: Festival Moths orbit green lanterns, Ratcoons hunt crumbs under benches, moss hens chase everything they can reach. The air carries laughter covering worry, green lantern glow...
