infrastructure, memory, and place at once. The ward lines are not decoration; they are infrastructure made visible as grooves, mosslight, dust, and old promises. The ward lines are magic behaving like public infrastructure: beautiful, temperamental, practical, and old enough that maintenance feels like ritual. The place breaks into usable table spaces: Bright junction: Several lines meet and pulse under the ground. Dim gap: A weak stretch makes the whole system feel vulnerable. Stone service marker: Old stones mark where people once tended the line. Plants and materials: Sunfire Lily, grass grows brighter along stable lines, flowers bend away from unstable gaps, moss thickens around service stones. Animals and background life: Ward-Moths cluster at warm junctions, Mist-Things avoid stable lines and drift near flickering gaps. The air carries line hum, static hair, glowing dew...
