A mile-long living briar wall that blocks routes, shelters Wanderer families, and moves faster when its thorns taste blood. The Wandering Briar is a living wall with memory in its thorns, sheltering some people and punishing anyone who treats it like brush. The Wandering Briar is a place that has learned to move: thorn walls, dragged doors, laundry, hidden hollows, and paths that are different the next time you look. The place breaks into usable table spaces: Thorn mouth: The entry looks like a plant trying to be a doorway. Dragged-room hollow: Old cart panels and doors create private pockets. Root skid trail: The ground shows where the place moved. Plants and materials: living bramble, parasitic moss, latch-vines, thorn flowers that open after conflict. Animals and background life: mice in wall hollows, small birds using thorns as protection, insects that clean sap wounds. The air carries creaking thorn movement, sap smell, paths...
