An arch or checkpoint frames the road with audit lanterns and warning posts. Moss has climbed the official fixtures faster than anyone cleans it. Older trail cuts bypass the gate without announcing themselves. Distant beacon-pulses, stone vibration, notices snapping in wind, and a low hum that arrives late. Oil from lanterns, damp moss, cold metal, and the sour paper smell of notices gone soft in rain. The gate surface is slick at the top and gritty near hand height. People or animals orient toward the signal for a breath, then pretend it is normal. An arch or checkpoint frames the road with audit lanterns and warning...
