- Readaloud: The clearing's stones make the ward visible: blue seams, old cuts, moss-lit lanes, and a center that pulls every sound inward before the ritual begins.
- Gmnotes: This is a close-detail map, not a separate route.
- Gmscript: Say: "These stones are the close-up of the ritual geometry. Read them now if you want the opening pressure to be less blind."
- Gmreadaloud: Weathered stones ring the clearing. Blue seams and old cuts answer the Keystone. The center pulls every sound inward.
- Gmcheckboxlist: Use for S05-01 prep and S05-02 countdown setup. Knowledge reads ward-script. Instinct reads which stones are waking. Return to S05-02 or MAP-S05-03.
- Gmprivate: The stones are older than the current ownership story; do not turn that into a lore lecture.
- Playertakeaway: The clearing's stones make the ward visible: blue seams, old cuts, moss-lit lanes, and a center that pulls every sound inward before the ritual begins.
- Storytakeaway: The stones show the ward predates the official story.
- Mechanictakeaway: Knowledge and Instinct reads can set ritual_prep=ready or soften the opening pressure.

- Playerquestions: Who reads the stones? Who turns the stone read into a defensive position?
- Fearsponds: A stone speaks in a sound like a lock turning. Blue light follows a PC's shadow instead of the ground.
- Choicesconsequences: Read the stones before the ritual starts. The map clarifies the active table choice instead of becoming a side route. Use the map only when spatial clarity changes the next roll, countdown tick, or protection choice. The result carries forward through Act 5 state rather than adding a new branch.

The clearing's stones make the ward visible: blue seams, old cuts, moss-lit lanes, and a center that pulls every sound inward before the ritual begins. Foreshadow battlefield geometry without starting combat early. This is a close-detail map, not a separate route. Stone shapes break the clearing into lines of sight and ritual lanes. Blue moss and old cuts mark where hands have worked before. Some stones lean toward Hush. Ward-light ticks in grooves, wind thins near the center, and voices come back as if the clearing is measuring them. Cold stone, crushed grass, blue moss, and dust warmed by ward-light. The stones are smooth on one face and jagged where old force split them.

Animals keep to the edge. The place feels operational...
