This is a beginner-friendly Daggerheart one-shot. You do not need to know the rules ahead of time. We will learn by playing.

Player bullets

- You are hired contractors or trusted associates escorting a sealed delivery through the Goldspire Territories.
- The job looks simple. It will not stay simple.
- Tone: sincere fantasy adventure, corporate satire, and a little dark whimsy.
- Share spotlight, ask questions, pass when needed, help other characters look cool, and respect safety tools.
- GM style: clear rulings, rules-light at first, and consequences tied to the fiction.

"Welcome to Peril to Profit: The Goldspire Messengers. You do not need to know Daggerheart tonight; I will teach the rules when they matter." If a player asks what they should focus on: "Focus on what your character wants, what they try, and what they ask. I will handle when dice enter the scene." This is where Kyle establishes trust: story-first, roleplay-friendly, rules as support, and questions welcome at any time. roleplay table-spotlight The story is a delivery job that grows teeth The party are contractors or trusted associates on a job that will complicate. Player-safe frame: contract, sealed package, old forest, village destination. The named lore can arrive later through questions. "Your characters are here because of a delivery job. On paper it is simple; in play it is going to ask what you protect and what you are willing to question." If someone asks whether their PC already knows the setting: "You know enough to take the job. You are new to..."
