- Gmnotes: Script: Frame the one-shot as adult PG-13-ish. Say that combat exists, descriptions of violence will be light, animal peril can be avoided or softened, and any player can pause or redirect if something crosses a line. Do not over-explain the content warning. Make it clear, quick, and normal. Use the safety page for extra tools only if the table seems to need them. - Gmreadaloud: I would rate tonight around PG-13-ish, with adults at the table. There will be combat and danger, but I will keep violence light unless the table clearly wants more description. Animal peril can be avoided or softened. If something crosses a line, say pause, ask for a rewind, or tell me to soften it. We will adjust without making it a big deal.

"Tonight is PG-13-ish with adults at the table: danger and combat are in play, but violence stays light unless the table clearly wants more description." If someone asks about animal peril: "It can appear as a possibility, but we can soften it, avoid it, or keep it offscreen." Specific content warning: fantasy combat, monsters, ambush, exploitation, fear magic, undead elements, and optional animal peril. safety-tools Danger is present but not graphic Combat and peril can appear without gore or cruelty becoming the point. This keeps the adventure adult without making edge the table's default mode. "The story can get tense, but I am not here to make anyone sit through graphic detail. torture, cruelty showcase, or graphic violence." This keeps the adventure adult without making edge the table's default mode. safety-tools Pause...
