A walled city of honey-colored stone on the very lip of the great forest, where the last paved road in the world meets the first wild tree. Emeris is a prosperous walled city built where the paved world ends and Sablewood begins. Honey-colored houses climb gentle streets toward a great western gate, banners hang from crowded windows, and the air smells of fresh bread, ink, oiled leather, and the green breath of the forest. Emeris is the capital of its own territory and proud of it, a tight, prosperous walled city built where the paved world ends and Sablewood begins. Its houses are honey-colored stone with steep painted shingles, crowded shoulder to shoulder up gentle streets that all seem to bend, eventually, toward the great gate in the western wall. Banners hang from every other window, half of them advertising something. The markets are loud and good-natured. This is a courier town as much as a capital, so the talk is all of...
- Robust: Emeris is honey-colored stone, crowded courier squares, fried gate dough, painted shingles, and the great western road leaning into Sablewood's green dark. Emeris is the one-shot start city and a separate territory capital. It begins publicly safe and prosperous; Hush, not Emeris, carries the immediate ward crisis. Warm walls, route stalls, wax seals, oiled leather, gate bells, bread steam, and a forest smell pushing over the western wall. Emeris wants the road to feel profitable, knowable, and safe enough that couriers keep leaving at dawn. Its confidence cracks when route danger, contractor deaths, or ward-liability paperwork make the safe city feel dependent on unsafe work. Use Emeris to ground the job in civic comfort before the table enters Sablewood; it is the launching point, not the reveal. Knowledge / Presence 12 Read the courier economy cleanly: the city makes money by turning forest risk into routes, permits, guide fees, and cheerful confidence. Learn which gate, guide stall, or clerk can point the party toward Sablewood. Learn the route answer, but a clerk notes the party's interest in the contract. You miss the bigger pattern, but find the right gate and one useful...
