A prosperous Sablewood settlement where hazard rate becomes money, reputation, and a quiet measure of who survives the route. The Refuge is prosperous because people learned how to survive Sablewood, not because Sablewood became safe. The Refuge feels warm but not static: soup, blankets, repairs, whispers, small injuries, and people deciding whether rest is enough. The place breaks into usable table spaces: Common room: Chairs, blankets, and bowls make safety visible. Supply corner: Practical goods show what the place can offer. Back exit: A quiet way out keeps safety from becoming a trap. Plants and materials: potted herbs, dried moss bundles, medicinal roots. Animals and background life: Rabbit-Gliders skim near the fishing lines, Moth-Possums cling in warm rafters, Turtle-Mice work the crumb paths, Badger-Hawks dive for catches outside. The air carries soup steam, low voices, blanket smell, wardstone night-light. People arrive shaken, get fed, exchange...
