A Progress Countdown-based traversal environment where finding entrances and navigating similar passages matter more than fighting. Underroot Tunnels feels like a specific place with its own traffic, work, weather, sounds, and local habits. The place breaks into usable table spaces: Arrival edge: The first view gives players a clear threshold and a reason to slow down. Working center: The active middle of the location shows what people or nature are doing before the party interferes. Quiet side path: A quieter edge gives curious players somewhere to poke without leaving the scene. Plants and materials: local weeds, moss, cultivated growth, or scrub that changes how paths feel underfoot. Animals and background life: small local wildlife reacts before people do. The air carries weather, ward hum, water...
