Claravale Market turns forest wonder into breakfast, tools, gossip, and pocket-sized miracles: local stalls beside a few too-clean branded carts. Use the market for supplies, rumors, a festival boon, and a player-safe corporate/local seam. Stalls crowd under green shade with mossfruit, repaired gear, and river-bright bottles. People trade news while pretending they are only trading goods. A few prices change when route rumors arrive. Village life stays audible: work sounds, lowered voices, doors, tools, and ward tones changing the room's confidence. Fried roots, river mint, wet canvas, lamp oil, and sweet fruit skins. Coins are sticky with syrup; market planks flex over damp ground. Let ordinary people, animals, chores, and hospitality react to the party so the place feels...

- Takeawayhelp: Player takeaway The market gives supplies, rumors, and possible boon texture. "You can buy, trade, ask, browse, or look for one thing useful enough to carry forward." "A useful find can be the festival boon: charm, favor token, market find, or goodwill." Keep market use concise: one item, one rumor, one seam, then back to the route. presence instinct knowledge Story takeaway The market shows Hush's local life and outside supply dependence at the same time. "Most stalls feel handmade. A few feel imported, labeled, and too clean for the lane around them." "Player-safe fact: branded goods exist here. GM-only truth: those supply lines are part of the larger management web." This is a good place to seed without derailing the main objective. presence instinct knowledge Mechanic takeaway Presence, Instinct, and Knowledge each produce a different market result. "Presence 12 haggles or charms. Instinct 12 sorts rumor. Knowledge 12 recognizes supply branding." "Success can set festival_boon=market_find or hush_clues=market_rumor." Market mechanics should produce a portable payoff or a clear next direction. presence instinct knowledge
