Player-safe knowledge should be concrete enough to start play. Do not show hidden knowledge on the player display. Checklist: Starting knowledge aligned; Hidden knowledge kept GM-only GM-only: Keystone's real ward function; Ward network soul-economy implications; Bramble Union's deeper motives; Final ritual threat; Relay Spire hook
- Gmscript: Read the player-safe starting knowledge. Keep the hidden facts in GM view only and use them for foreshadowing, not for projection.
- Gmreadaloud: Here is what your characters know at the start. You have a delivery job. You are carrying a sealed important package. You are going through a huge old forest to a village. You do not know every name, faction, or secret yet, and that is intentional. Your characters are new to this specific route and area, so asking questions in character is part of play.

- Playertakeaway: Players know the starting facts without receiving hidden GM answers.
- Storytakeaway: They are escorting a sealed important package to a village through a huge old forest.
- Mechanictakeaway: Separates player-safe starting knowledge from GM-only mystery.
- Takeawayhelp: Players know starting facts only Players know the starting facts without hidden GM answers. This is where lore overload gets prevented. Players know enough to act and enough not to feel stupid asking basic questions. "Starting facts: you have a sealed important package, a paid delivery job, a huge old forest route, and a village destination. The rest is allowed to be unknown." If someone asks whether their character should know the names: "If it makes sense, you may know the company name, the village name, or the forest name, but you are still new to this specific route." This is where lore overload gets prevented. Players know enough to act and enough not to feel stupid asking basic questions. roleplay Known route, unknown truth They escort a sealed package to a forest village through a huge old forest. Use plain descriptions before proper nouns: company, old forest, village, sealed package. Names can arrive through play. "The job is simple at the surface: get the package to the village. The truth underneath it is what play will uncover." If someone asks what is inside the package: "You do not know yet. Marlowe knows it matters; Varian, Khari, and others may notice physical...

What this PC knows before the Prologue Marlowe knows the package is not an ordinary courier parcel. She knows it matters and that she is responsible for it, but not the full truth yet. She can be the first PC to feel the weight of the contract without becoming the person who explains the whole plot. Marlowe, you know the package matters more than a normal parcel. You do not know the full truth yet, but you feel responsible for getting it there sealed. barnacle Barnacle he/him Underborne Ribbet Rogue, Nightwalker Shadows, deals, underworld instinct, and noticing when a job smells wrong. What this PC knows before the Prologue Barnacle knows secrecy, rush, and good pay together usually mean someone powerful wants deniability. He can ask the practical underworld questions: who benefits, who pays extra, and what clause is missing. Barnacle, this job smells like secrecy plus hurry plus money. That combination usually means someone wants deniability. garrick-reed Garrick Reed he/him Highborne Human Warrior, Call of the Brave...
